

Madeleine Korbelt Albright*Doctor of Laws*

Madeleine Albright is the Michael and Virginia Mortara Endowed Distinguished Professor in the Practice of Diplomacy at Georgetown University and founder and Principal of The Albright Group LLC, a team of international negotiators and diplomats. Dr. Albright served as the 64th secretary of state of the United States from 1997 to 2001. When named as the first woman secretary of state, she became, at that time, the highest ranking woman in the history of the United States government. As secretary, Dr. Albright reinforced America's alliances, advocated democracy and human rights, and promoted American trade and business, labor and environmental standards abroad. From 1993 to 1997 she was the United States Permanent Representative to the United Nations and a member of President Clinton's Cabinet and National Security Council. In 1995 she led the U.S. delegation to the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, China. From 1978 to 1981, Dr. Albright served on President Carter's National Security Council and White House staff. For the next decade she was Director of Women in Foreign Service Programs and Research Professor of International Affairs at Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service, where she taught undergraduate and graduate courses international affairs, U.S. foreign policy, Russian foreign policy, and Central and Eastern European politics. She was especially responsible for developing and implementing programs designed to enhance women's professional opportunities in international affairs. Dr. Albright received her undergraduate degree with honors in political science from Wellesley College and master's and doctoral degrees from Columbia University. Born in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Dr. Albright immigrated to America with her family after that country fell behind the Iron Curtain in 1948.
